Many people have helped to write this history. Hours of research were spent among dusty records and faded photographs. The printing, typography and art in the book are contributions of members and friends of the First Presbyterian Church. We are grateful to all who have shared in this effort, and hope that it may bring about a deeper appreciation of our Christian heritage.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The word Presbyterian is derived from Presbyter or Elder, and the Presbyterian Church is that Church in which the government of the society of believers is committed to elders.

There are two orders of Elders:

Teaching Elders—ministers Ruling Elders—members of the congregation elected to the office by the congregation.

Beliefs of the Presbyterian Church

“We believe and teach what the Scriptures themselves
teach; making those doctrines most prominent which they most earnestly insist upon.”

A Landmark and a Symbol

Approach York from any direction—the good, grey spire of The First Presbyterian Church stands straight and true against the sky. From atop the Queen Street Hill it is in bold relief against a widening panorama of factories, homes and farms. From the heights above Dover it is a distant—but distinct—reminder that here in this city is a strong faith and a strong church. Along several miles of the Expressway that half encircles the community, it can be viewed from the North, the East, and the South, as one might travel along the outer rim of a wheel and look inward toward the center. Not so much because of its height alone, but because of its setting, the spire has become a landmark from outside the city and within the city. From a distance it places upon the York scene a mark of character and aspiration; close up, from along Market Street, it forces the viewer to lift his eyes, and perhaps his spirit, to the widening sky.

Frequently, landmarks become symbols, and so it is with this. Every work of man is a testimony to his faith or pride or greed. Paradoxically, his noblest works have been wrought in humility. And so, from the vantage point of two hundred years, the York Community has a right to ask—as we Presbyterians must ask—what is our beloved landmark a symbol of, and for? Is it a monument to men, or to God? And from what foundations does this tower rise—is it rooted in devotion, duty and good works? There are two centuries of history in which to find the answer.

First Roots

Three hundred years ago, Presbyterians from England, Scotland and Ireland came to the New World in search of religious freedom. They brought with them the Westminster Confession of Faith, the Shorter and Larger Catechisms, and the stern Calvinistic insistence on the importance of education, democratic procedure, and following one's conscience. As the early pioneers moved westward toward the Alleghenies, English-speaking Presbyterians crossed the Susquehanna into what is now York County. Exactly when this was is not known, but we do know that they had settled in the tiny village of York as early as 1745. Some years later, this group entered American history via a letter written by John Adams on October 27, 1777. In York as a delegate to the Continental Congress, Adams wrote that "there is one church here erected by the joint contributions of Episcopalians and Presbyterians, but the minister, who is a missionary, is confined for Toryism so that they have had for a long time no public worship."

Little is actually known about the early years of those few, who were to become the First Presbyterian Church. In common with Presbyterians throughout America, they shared in the stirring events that led to the founding of the new nation. Politically and morally dedicated to freedom of worship and to independence and equality under the law, they contributed much to the fiber of our national character. In fact, the role played by Presbyterians during the American Revolution was so important, that in England the war was frequently described as the "Presbyterian Rebellion." Presbyterians were almost unanimous in their support of freedom's cause. Since they constituted about one third of the population in Pennsylvania, it is little wonder that our Commonwealth became the rallying point for the new nation's ordeal and triumph.

If a single year must be fixed as the first date in the history of this Church, it would be 1761. The records of Donegal Presbytery for that year show a request from a group of York Presbyterians for ministerial supplies. The request could not be granted. From its founding, the Presbyterian denomination insisted on a high standard of liberal and theological education for its ministers. In colonial days this meant that, for the most part, ministers had to be brought from Europe, or sent to Europe for training since there were few schools in the Colonies that could meet the requirements. Therefore, qualified men were hard to come by. Moreover, the new country was immense, travel was difficult and there were just not enough ministers to go around.

1762: A Beginning

The first formal Presbyterian church services in York probably were held in 1762. In that year the Presbytery began sending theological students to conduct services and minister to the needs of the small congregation. This practice was continued for some twenty years until, in 1783, the York Presbyterians united with the Hopewell Church at Round Hill in issuing a call to the Reverend McWilliam Boyd at a salary of sixty pounds from each church per year. Even though Mr. Boyd was "not persuaded," the York group pressed forward to the establishment of a permanent church. In 1785 application was made to John Penn and John Penn, Jr., for a grant of land on which to erect a Presbyterian Church. The Penns agreed, and conveyed

“the piece of ground situate on the corner of High (now Market) and Queen Streets, to George Irwin, William Scott and Archibald McLean, as a site for a house of religious worship and burial ground for the use of the English Presbyterians and their successors in and near the town of York.” The fee for transfer was five shillings.

Here, in 1789, the year in which the United States Constitution was ratified, a church building was started. It was a simple brick structure with a door at the side, a wide aisle running through the center, a high pulpit and large square pews. There was no spire on this first church and the building was very small in comparison to the one we know today, yet it must have been a triumph of magnificent proportions for those who struggled to see it finished.

With their church building underway, the York congregation finally was successful in obtaining a permanent pastor. In 1791 the congregation joined with the Hopewell Church to extend a call to the Reverend Robert Cathcart of Philadelphia. Among the signers of the call was James Smith, a great Revolutionary patriot who had returned to York after the war to practice law. Smith was the first colonist to organize a military unit for the Revolution. He was a delegate to the Continental Congress and a signer of The Declaration of Independence. His grave in the Presbyterian churchyard is one of York's historic landmarks.

Others who signed the call to Doctor Cathcart were Dr. Robert Kennedy, William McClellan, George Irwin, Jenet Grier, William McIlvaine, Peter McIntyre and John Forsythe. Forsythe traveled to Philadelphia to arrange for Dr. Cathcart's presentation to the York and Hopewell congregations. Now, after more than thirty years, the First Presbyterian Church of York was finally and permanently established. The first era of growth and continuity had begun.

The Ministry of Dr. Cathcart

Dr. Cathcart was a native of Londonderry, Ireland and a graduate of The University of Glasgow. He had been in America only three years. When he came to York in 1793, the church building was not quite completed. The congregation numbered about twenty-five families, with only six communicants—all women. For the next forty-two years he was to build on this small beginning.

In any age Dr. Cathcart would have been an outstanding leader. At this crucial period in the life of the First Presbyterian Church, he was extraordinary and indispensable. A man of wide reading, broad sympathies, and tolerant understanding, he set the early spiritual and moral tone of the Church—indeed, of a large segment of the community. He was a stern disciplinarian of himself. He both preached and practiced the virtues of sacrificial giving, tolerance and punctuality. From his salary of $750.00 he annually contributed $130.00 to missions. His readiness to grant the same right of free thought and honest belief to others which he claimed for himself led him to protest against all theological intolerance. He wrote, "The moment our denomination of Christians undertakes to explain what God has not explained they engage in a business which, if it is not anti-scriptural is at least supra-scriptural—such prying speculations are not for edification." He served two congregations that were separated by fifteen miles of rugged carriage road. On alternate Sundays he drove to Hopewell, in the heat and dust of summer and the snow and mud of winter. In forty-two years he missed his Hopewell service only once—that because of illness.

For the first twenty years of Dr. Cathcart's ministry in York, the Church seems to have been managed "without any particular attention to forms. During all this period there was never a congregational meeting held, but everything was harmoniously conducted and not a murmur of dispute was known. The property and pecuniary affairs of the congregation were managed by a few active individuals who informally obtained the consent of the rest."

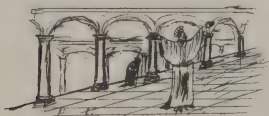

But Dr. Cathcart knew that every church must have an organizational structure for continued growth. In 1813 a charter of incorporation was sought and granted to "the Reverend Robert Cathcart, William Harris, John Forsythe, William Barber, James Johnson, and Penrose Robertson and their successors duly elected, to have continuance forever thereafter, by the name, style and title of the Trustees of the English Presbyterian Congregation in the Borough of York." Two ruling elders were immediately elected, Peter McIntyre and William McIlvain. These first elders have been followed through the years by a succession of able, dedicated men who have served with devotion and wisdom.

In terms of its physical plant, the Church grew. In 1817 a parsonage was built for the pastor and his family—a brick house facing what is now East Market Street. It was a substantial building, and was used for 72 years.

More important was the Church's growing influence in the community. In 1817 the first Sunday School movement was begun in York, Dr. Cathcart being a prominent leader. It was a Union Sunday School, and met in a schoolhouse on Philadelphia Street, every Sunday afternoon between the hours of one and four o'clock. After the first year, its membership reached three hundred and sessions were moved to the York County Academy Building. When its founder, an Episcopal churchman named

Samuel Bacon, went to Africa as a missionary, Dr. Cathcart took his place as President. Gradually, as the various denominations established Sunday Schools in their own churches, the group came to be made up largely of Presbyterians and beginning in 1838 the school sessions were held in the “gallery of the Presbyterian Church.”

Perhaps the most valuable legacy from Dr. Cathcart’s ministry was his organization of the lay structure of the church. In his early years, he had little lay assistance, but as time went on he gathered around him a remarkable group of young men whose names are important to any history of our Church, or of the York Community. When Dr. Cathcart resigned, one of his first elders, Peter McIntyre, was fifty-seven. The other of the original two, William McIlvain, was fifty-four. In addition to these, the officers and leaders of the Church were vigorous young men, all of whom had considerable standing and influence in the community: Philip A. Small, 43; Samuel Small, 41; John L. Mayer, Esq., 30; John Evans, Esq., 40; Edward Chapin, Esq., 41; Dr. W. H. McClellan, 31; and Dr. James W. Kerr, 27. Ever since, following their splendid example, ours has been distinctly a church of laymen working with and loyally supporting the ministers they have called to lead them.

Dissent and Division

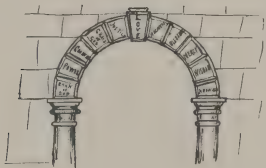

Dr. Cathcart was prominent in the affairs of Carlisle Presbytery and the Synod of Philadelphia. Through this, the congregation was drawn into the larger concerns of the denomination. Because of Dr. Cathcart’s influence and prestige, this Church was chosen for the meeting of the Synod in 1835.

This meeting was memorable for the trial of Dr. Albert Barnes, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, on a charge that his exposition of St. Paul's Letter to the Romans constituted "heresies of doctrinal opinions and teachings." Theological beliefs were much more sharply disputed in 1835 than they are today, and "feelings ran high." Dr. Cathcart was one of a small minority who defended Dr. Barnes' right to interpret scripture as his conscience directed, and attempted to have the charges dismissed. But the majority of the delegates found Dr. Barnes guilty and suspended him from the ministry. Even though the decision was reversed and Dr. Barnes was reinstated the following year, a powerful force was set in motion that was virtually to split the Presbyterian Church in America.

The trial of Dr. Barnes helped to bring into the open a division in the denomination that had been growing for years between a conservative group known as the "Old School" and a more liberal group known as the "New School." There was no difference in basic doctrine or belief—both declared their adherence to the Westminster Confession of Faith and to the approved system of Presbyterian church government. The dispute arose over differences of opinion as to the orthodoxy of a more liberal interpretation of scripture, of a certain emotional evangelism countenanced by the "New School," and over such innovations as the use of hymns in place of "plainsong" or the chanting of psalms. The dissension became widespread and bitter—in 1837 each group elected its own delegates to the General Assembly. This resulted in the scandal of two general assemblies and two sets of delegates, each claiming to be the true Presbyterian Church. The division was reflected in local churches and continued to separate them until the breach was officially healed in 1870.

So long as Dr. Cathcart was pastor in York, his wisdom and guidance were sufficient to hold the congregation together. But his active ministry of forty-four years had begun to tell on his physical strength. At eighty years of age he felt it necessary to resign and was succeeded by the Rev. Benjamin J. Wallace. Without Dr. Cathcart's restraining influence, differences flared into open hostility until finally a conservative minority of "Old School" adherents attempted to force the liberal or "New School" group out of the Church, and to get control of the Church property. Claiming to be the "true" congregation they brought an "Act of Ejectment" against Mr. Wallace, who was serving as pastor, and the New School majority. The case was one of the most famous of its time. It was tried before Judge Hays of Lancaster who ruled in favor of the majority. His decision was upheld in an appeal to the Superior Court. Thus defeated, the "Old School" members formed their own congregation with the Reverend Stephen Boyer, principal of the York County Academy, as pastor. In 1856, with their membership down to five, they disbanded.

Years of Tragedy and Triumph Toward a New Church

In the years between 1835 and 1841, the years of division, membership in the First Church declined from two hundred to about fifty. Under the guidance of Mr. Wallace, unity was restored and the financial status of the Church improved. Mr. Wallace was followed by Dr. David Hopkins Emerson, who served from 1845 to 1855. During his ministry a small frame Sunday School building was erected, then enlarged in 1851. The Church acquired its first pipe organ in 1855. In that year the Reverend Charles J. Hutchins was installed, and a “time of special in-gathering” brought the church membership to one hundred forty-three. As the Church reached the end of its first century, it approached, with the nation, its greatest challenge. With the nation, it was to struggle and triumph.

Dr. Thomas Street was installed as pastor on the eve of the Civil War. The four years of his ministry were the difficult years of “excitement and peril growing out of the War of the Rebellion.” As in most American communities, York’s peaceful life was shattered by the tragedy. Sympathies for the Union and Confederate causes divided the town. As in the Revolution, York was brought into direct participation by the establishment of Camp Scott on the Fair Grounds and a hospital on Penn Common, where women from the First Church gave volunteer care to the sick and wounded. On Sunday, June 28, 1863, Confederate troops entered the town, demanding food, clothing, and a large sum of money. For a few hours, until General Lee recalled the troops to Gettysburg, the citizens of York experienced what it is like to live under a hostile army of occupation.

Dr. Street was a man of strong convictions. Throughout these anxious days he gave courageous leadership to the Church in opposition to slavery and secession. A contemporary wrote: “It was no doubtful utterance which he made in the name of God for right and liberty and union.”

In spite of deep differences within the congregation, the unity of the Church held. Out of these times that tried men’s souls and forced them to examine their own convictions, a stronger faith evolved, and with it the courage to undertake an ambitious building program.

extensive repairs. In the winter of 1860 part of the ceiling fell. The congregation voted to employ Joseph Hoxie of Philadelphia to draw plans for a new building. The first structure had been built on faith and hope, not much more. Now, the new building, with its greater size and beauty, would be an expression of gratitude and of continuing trust in God's care. The symmetrical spire, rising high above the street where daily life is lived, would draw men's eyes and thoughts upward to a nobler understanding of their earthly mission.

Because of the War it was difficult to raise money for the new building. At one point it was nearly decided that the spire could not be finished, but the will of those with greater faith and courage prevailed. The original plans were carried to completion, and the First Church began its second century with a new dedication and a new potential for influence in the York community.

At the dedication service in September, 1861, Dr. W. H. McClellan expressed the feeling of the congregation in these words: "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us. For, though a little band at first, struggling with poverty and in poor circumstances, our history, since the settlement of our first pastor, though not rapid in progress, has been one of unbroken prosperity. Thus far the Lord has led us on. May our devotion to His cause be such that He may continue to watch over, protect and cause the light of His countenance and favor to shine upon us in the future as He has done in the past and unto Him be all the glory."

The Ministry of Dr. Niles, 1865–1900

The Reverend Henry Edward Niles accepted a call to become pastor of the York church upon the resignation of Dr. Street in 1864. Dr. Niles was to serve during the entire final third of the Nineteenth Century, just as Dr. Cathcart had served during the first third. Both men were vigorous and inspiring leaders; both men had a profound influence on the development of the First Church, and of the York community.

Dr. Niles was installed on Sunday, April 16, 1865, known as “Black Easter.” Ten days before, General Lee had surrendered. On April 13th the Harrisburg Presbytery had convened its semi-annual session in the York Church. On the evening of the following day President Lincoln was assassinated. The news reached York by Saturday noon and, instead of the usual Easter decorations of palms and lilies, the church was draped in black. In this atmosphere of mourning, Dr. Niles’ installation was held Sunday evening.

Though his ministry began at a time of deep national sorrow and anguish, Dr. Niles brought with him the inspirational and organizational talents that create life and growth. When he arrived in York there were one hundred and fifteen communicant members, of whom only twenty-two were men. By the end of his pastorate, the membership had increased to over five hundred, and attendance at Sunday School was flourishing. Dr. Niles was extremely successful with the young people of the Church. Toward the end of his ministry he wrote, “From my first Sabbath in York, when the Superintendent, Dr. Kerr, invited me to visit the School, and rising to their feet the whole company gave me a greeting in verse written for the purpose:

‘Welcome, Pastor! Welcome Brother!
One and all we welcome thee!’

from that memorable day down to the present I have had much encouragement in dealing with the young.”

Under his leadership the Sunday School soon outgrew its original quarters. In 1867 the old wooden structure was torn down to make way for a new brick building, completed and dedicated in 1868. The building cost twenty thousand dollars and, according to a contemporary report in the newspaper, two thousand dollars still had to be raised when the dedication service was held Sunday afternoon, May the 24th. Dr. Duryea was one of the speakers. In a moving address he spoke of “the blessedness of doing good, the rewards of benevolence, the right use of money.” Dr. Niles then in a “few graceful words” said that a little more money was necessary in order to dedicate the building free of debt as it should be when given to the Lord. He proposed to go through with the service but to reserve the prayer of dedication for another meeting to be held that evening. Between the afternoon and evening meetings about four thousand dollars was raised. In the evening the house was again crowded. The pastor announced that they were now ready to dedicate an unencumbered house—and thus ended “one of the happiest days for this enterprising church and congregation.”

The period of Dr. Niles’ ministry was one of vast national growth. Despite the difficult adjustments of the Reconstruction there was a new feeling of confidence. It was a time for great outpourings of physical and spiritual energy, for increased social awareness, and for new ventures into many areas. Particularly, it was a time of beginning for many women’s organizations. At the First Church, within only a few years, the Women's Foreign Missionary Society, the Ladies' Aid and the Home Missionary Society were formed. Almost instantly they became vigorous and dynamic expressions of the Christian life.

Truly it was a time for gathering together in common efforts for good. The Christian Endeavor, the Temperance Society, the Always Ready Missionary Band, the Young Men's Association were all started during these years. The influence of the Church upon the social and cultural life of the York community was at its zenith at this period.

The Church stood at the very forefront of community advancement in many fields—education, recreation, welfare and medical care. The Children's Home, the York Collegiate Institute, the York YWCA, and the York Hospital—all date from this period and were founded or actively sponsored by members of the First Church as practical expressions of Christianity.

As the century neared its close, Dr. Niles was approaching his seventy-seventh birthday. He had served his "dear people" for thirty-five years, during which the Church had undergone almost continuous change. He had established a moral and spiritual tone to which the entire community might well aspire—indeed, his insistence on intellectual excellence is being sounded by all great educators today. Failing health forced him to resign, and after a short illness he died on May 14, 1900.

Christians CROSS ^{BEFORE} Christians CROWN.

The Early Twentieth Century

The Reverend David Curry, who had been called as an assistant to Dr. Niles shortly before his death, became the next pastor, and for eight years he served with great devotion.

Mr. Curry was succeeded by Dr. John Ellery Tuttle in 1908. During Dr. Tuttle's ministry the Church was extensively re-modeled. The organ and choir were moved from the rear to the front of the sanctuary. In 1910 individual glasses for communion services were first used; the following year pew rents were discontinued and the envelope system was inaugurated. In 1913 the Church celebrated the Sesquicentennial of its beginning (1762) and the Centennial of its Charter of Incorporation (1813).

Dr. Andrew Todd Taylor became minister in 1916. His pastorate was to last only three years, but he made a deep impression on all who knew him. Many of his contemporaries felt that he was destined to be one of the great influences in the history of the First Church. Dr. Taylor gave the Church its first regular publication, a weekly magazine called THE VISITOR. From 1917 to 1934 it was mailed each week to every member of the congregation. W. McConkey Kerr was the editor throughout its entire existence.

In 1916 the Whiteley-Steacy organ was dedicated, adding greatly to the musical enrichment of the services.

Dr. Taylor's ministry embraced the years of World War I. Through his sermons, he was able to communicate his sense of the War's tragedy. He brought home to his congregation the failure of the Christian Church to exert a directing influence on world politics. At the close of the War he went to London as a delegate to the World's Brotherhood Federation. Soon after his return he became ill and died. He is buried, with his wife, in the Churchyard.

Three Decades of Growth and Service

The next three decades saw many physical and organizational changes in the Church. With a constantly growing membership and expanding needs in its educational program, the congregation undertook to enlarge and remodel its Sunday School, at the considerable cost of $113,000. Dr. Walter Jenkins Hogue, who served as pastor from 1920 to 1936, directed this effort. His successor, Dr. Thomas Sinclair Dickson, successfully organized and carried out the drive to raise $75,000 to pay the debt incurred in the remodeling.

During Dr. Dickson's ministry the "New Curriculum" was introduced in the Sunday School. The various women's societies in the Church were disbanded and fused into one Woman's Association, within which separate circles were organized. This followed a general reorganization of women's activities in the Presbyterian Church, as well as in other denominations.

With the disaster at Pearl Harbor in 1941, the Church was once more called upon to send its youth to war. Two hundred and six members of the First Church served in the armed forces. Six of these gave their lives. Those at home found in Dr. Dickson an unfailing source of comfort and strength during the many uncertain days.

When peace came, the increased membership and broadened activities of the Church made it necessary to provide an assistant minister. Three assistants served consecutively: The Reverend Andrew F. O'Connor, the Reverend John H. McClain, and the Reverend Philip R. Magee. Miss Barbara Hackett, M.R.E. also served for a time as Director of Religious Education.

Dr. Dickson's sudden death in the summer of 1953 was deeply mourned by the whole congregation. The Reverend Philip R. Magee served ably as acting minister for nearly a year until the installation of Dr. Ernest T. Campbell in 1954.

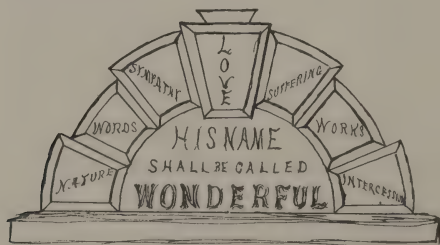

The Ministry of Dr. Campbell

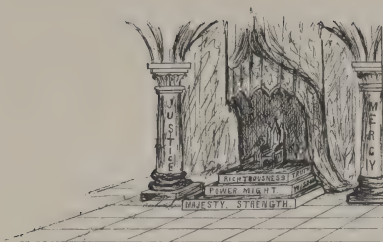

Dr. Campbell was one of the youngest men ever to hold the pastorship of the First Church. He came to York at a time of world-wide political revolution and terrifying scientific achievements which were forcing mankind everywhere to re-examine their origin, their destiny—and, above all, their faith. To this modern dilemma Dr. Campbell brought many unique talents which enabled him to point the Christian way with great clarity and precision. Thoroughly conversant with the complex problems of contemporary life, possessed of a totally winning personality that made him at home with any group, he expounded the enduring faith and moral values of the past in such a way as to give them fresh meaning for our times. In him, the First Church found a new, young voice that touched every segment of the community, drawing into the Church new members from all walks of life, and, particularly the young people.

The years of Dr. Campbell's ministry were characterized by great vitality which overflowed into every activity. For many in the Church, Christ truly came alive. Christian thought and Christian ethic became woven into the fabric of everyday living. It seemed as though many were making a renewed effort to put Christian principles into practice.

Dr. Campbell was ably supported by three successive assistant ministers, Philip R. Magee, C. Frederick Mathias and J. Raymond Brubaker, and by the Director of Religious Education, Miss Janice Anderson. His impact upon the community was profound. He extended the voice of the Church into new areas with a fifteen minute radio service "The Treasury of Christian Devotion." Later he inaugurated Dial-A-Prayer, by which anyone at any time of day or night might receive spiritual help simply by dialing a telephone number. His inspirational force as a preacher brought such numbers into the Church that it became necessary to hold two services each Sunday morning. New building programs were undertaken, culminating in the enlarging and remodeling of the W. McConkey Kerr Christian Education Building and, finally, the beautiful John Calvin Chapel, dedicated in 1959.

In September, 1962, Dr. Campbell accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor, Michigan. The Reverend J. Raymond Brubaker became acting minister as the Church entered its third century.

The Anniversary:

On October 14, 1962 the Church began a four weeks observance of the 200th Anniversary of its founding. Many friends shared in the celebration. On four consecutive Sundays the pulpit was occupied by the Reverend Stuart Dickson, son of the former pastor; the Reverend Philip R. Magee; the Reverend C. Frederick Mathias, and Dr. George A. Buttrick. Four hundred members attended a Birthday Dinner at which Dr. Eugene Carson Blake was the speaker, and for which Dr. Campbell returned to York to fill the role of toastmaster. A pageant, "Our Church," depicting the founding of the Church and some of the events of its two hundred years, brought into focus the devotion and dedication of our ancestors. An exhibition of pictures, documents and artifacts from the past was displayed in the York County Historical Society building and helped to deepen our understanding of our vigorous early days.

Many members gave long hours of thought and effort to make the Anniversary a memorable experience. To all who took part in or were witnesses of the celebration, one truth was clearly manifest: here was a culmination of two centuries of continuing devotion by many people with a common aim—to establish a Church of Jesus Christ which would be a living force in this community.

And now the third century in the life of the First Church presses upon us. Look up again to our slender spire—not only a landmark and a symbol, but also a challenge.
